The Peace Counts project documents successful peace-builders in over 30 crisis zones around the world, introducing them to millions of people.

War has become a media spectacle. It captivates us with images in which missiles explode, people threaten each other – scream at each other – kill each other. Peace is less conspicuous.

The multi-media project Peace Counts presents peace in fascinating ways. Telling the story of peace means distracting the viewer's gaze from mere scenes of war to the root causes and solutions of the conflicts.

In the last four years, photographers and journalists on assignment with Peace Counts visited peace-builders in 30 current conflict regions: doctors, priests, businessmen, ex-fighters, development workers, teachers, and mediators. Bereft of attention from the mass media, each has developed unique methods of resolving bloody conflicts without recourse to violence.
